

From Fearful to Fearless

On the first Saturday in December, Megan quickly jumped out of bed. She ran to her calendar. “Today’s the day!” she shouted. She was going to the amusement park for her birthday. She was excited but a little unsure about riding the roller coasters.

“Honk! Honk!” Preoccupied with her fear of roller coasters, Megan almost mistook the van’s horn for a bird. When she realized what she had heard, Megan ran out the door to hop in the van.

Megan sat down beside her best friend, Seth. Seth was looking at a flyer from the amusement park. “I think we should ride the bumper cars first,” he said.

“Sounds good to me!” Megan happily replied. “The bumper cars can’t be too scary,” she thought. When they arrived at the park, they unbuckled their seat belts. They got out of the van and ran across the parking lot.

“We’re here!” they shouted. “Let’s go!” Megan was determined not to be fearful of the rides. “I just need to relax,” she thought to herself. The bumper cars were a blast! Megan began to relax.

“Now let’s ride the roller coaster!” shouted Seth. Megan was speechless.

“Come on, Megan,” Seth urged. “Just take a deep breath and you’ll be fine.” Megan followed his advice and got on the ride. They began to move. They slowly crept to the top of the first hill. Megan’s eyes widened as they sped down the first hill. She laughed as they bobbed over many more. Even though she was a bit uneasy, she overcame her fear. Megan actually enjoyed the roller coaster. She smiled as they safely dismounted the ride.

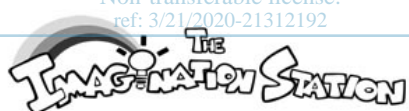

“That’s amazing!” Megan cried. She realized that roller coasters were harmless. “Thanks, Seth! I’ve had a wonderful birthday! I never thought I’d celebrate turning ten at the top of a roller coaster.”
